Jim, you saw the letter from the woman who was subjected to a pretext interview/ investigation after she phoned me. She has sent me a stat of her phone bill, which confirm the total charge of 89¢ for the call of more than an hour and the license number of the investigator. She was suspicious and noted it:862064 NY. It might be a good idea if Bud or Ken learned to whom this car is licensed. They should know that federal ownership is not improbable. In such cases, reaction is not unknown. The day after this conversation, to refresh recollection, this investigator came, alleging he was from their insurance company, which later denied sending him. His questions had nothing to do with their car insurance but did have to do with her and her husband, their jobs, interests, etc. When she got her back up and demanded to know he was asking such questions, he just walked out, which is what led her to take his number as he drove off.
